All indicators have a +/- 1-day window in which their energy should be seen.

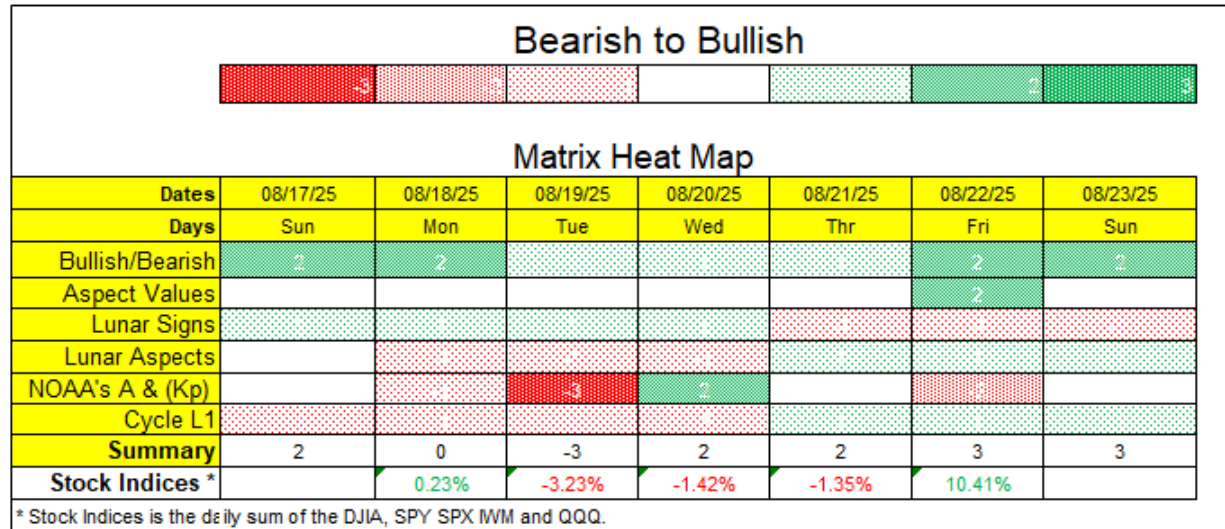

The weekly forecast mirrored last week's, blending notable Bearish and Bullish energies. Bearish pressure stemmed from the NOAA space weather forecast, which indicated a disturbance peaking on Tuesday. Consequently, all major indices except the DJIA closed lower.

The Bullish/Bearish Indicator showed peak Bullish sentiment on Monday, but we typically discount Monday's readings due to their unpredictability. Instead, we focus on the next most Bullish day, which was Friday, and the markets indeed closed higher.

Additionally, the Matrix highlighted Wednesday, the 20th, as the most Bearish day of the month, and the markets closed lower as anticipated.

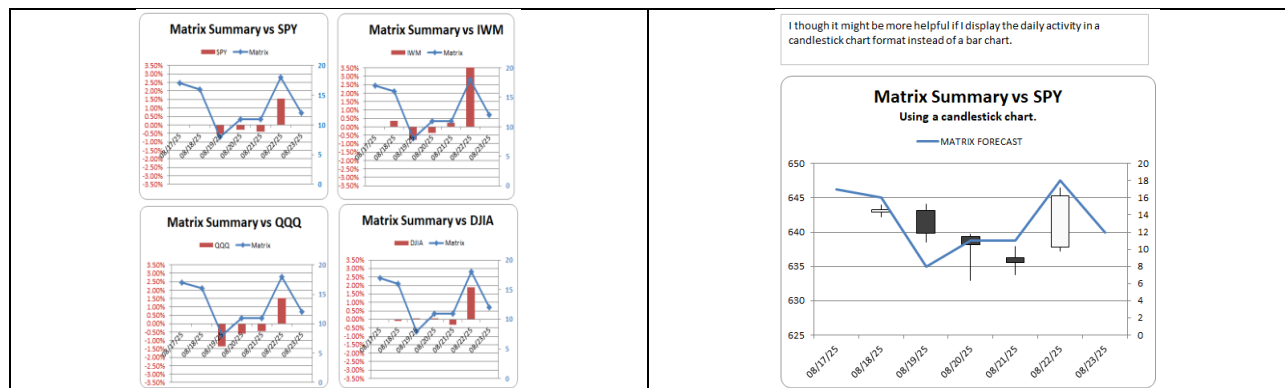

Matrix Heat Map

The Matrix Heat Map, a streamlined version of the Matrix, uses adjusted weightings for its values. It identified Tuesday as the most Bearish day and Friday as the most Bullish day.

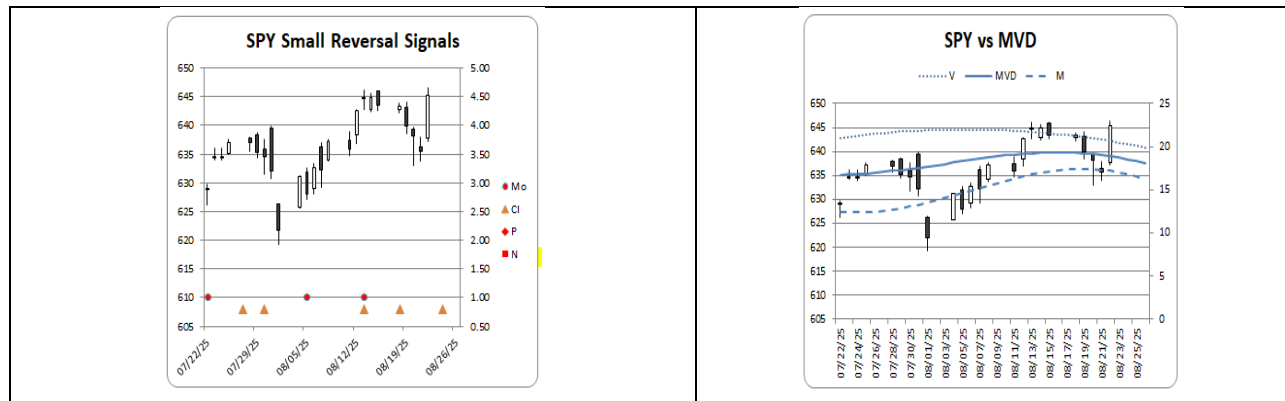

Matrix Summary

We exclude Monday from our analysis. For the rest of the week, we accurately predicted Tuesday and Friday, but missed Wednesday. Thursday showed no movement, so it's not counted. Overall, we had two correct predictions and two incorrect.

SPY Indicators

The prior week saw gains across the indices. This past week began with a reversal indicator on Monday. The SPY declined for four days before rising on Friday.
