Matrix Heat Map

The Matrix Heat Map, a simplified version of the Matrix, applies adjusted weightings to its values. It initially identified Tuesday as the most bullish day of the week, but this was invalid due to the holiday. Monday's forecast was strongly bearish, and with it being a holiday, that bearish momentum likely carried over to Tuesday, which it did. Wednesday showed a tendency toward a higher close, though evidence was insufficient to confirm it would. Thursday was moderately more bullish than Wednesday, and since Wednesday did close higher, the likelihood of a higher close on Thursday was significantly increased. Friday was slightly less bullish than Thursday, which alone wasn't significant, but Saturday was notably bearish. Consequently, that bearish energy was expected to manifest on Friday, and it did.

Matrix Summary

We exclude Monday from our analysis.

The Martix Summary was right only 2 out of 4 days when forecasting a higher or lower close than the day before.

On the candlestick chart, we look at the higher or lower close from the open. Here the chart was right 3 out of 4 times.

SPY Indicators

The prior week saw new highs as was expected. Friday did close lower as was expected due to a reversal signal on Friday this carried through to the open on Monday. The next reversal signal came on Monday. That forecasted a mover higher for the week.
