Matrix Calendar

The weekly outlook was:

The week looks bearish. Mostly on Wednesday and Thursday
New Moon on Tuesday. Often a truning point within a day or two.
10/20/25 -- Monday was a great example why I don't forecast for Mondays.
10/21/25 -- Lots of evidence we'll have a lower close on Wednesday.
10/21/25 -- The Moon is in Scorpio Wednesday and Thursday. One or both days should see a lower close.

Matrix Heat Map

The Matrix Heat Map, a simplified version of the Matrix, applies adjusted weightings to its values.

First of all, I want to apologize for a mistake I made on the Heat Map. See the blue square. The market tends to be most bullish in the 4 phase, but statistically, it continues to be bullish two days into the 2nd phase. I made a type by entering a -1 for Thursday when it should have been a 1. Luckily this mistake did not affect any trade signals.

Monday and Tuesday had the same rating: -1. That made them both the most bullish days of the week. As you know I do not make calls for Mondays. After the Bullish Monday, I didn't know how to call Tuesday so I passed on it.

Wednesday was clearly the most bearish day of the week. We sold some options for a profit of 78%.

Thursday and Friday both were rated at a -3. While this is a Bearish score, it is more bullish than Wednesday. The Matrix Summary showed higher closes on both days, but Friday had a special planetary influence: Mercury formed a bullish Trine aspect with both Jupiter and Saturn forming a Trine aspect to each other. That is a rare setup. So we went long on some binary option that returned a 96% profit.

Matrix Summary

Mondays are not included in the analysis. As usual, the indicators forecasted three days correctly.

The DJIA was right all four days.
